Electric Co-ops Offer Solar Energy to Customers

Part 1 in a series on solar farming

By Marsha Hewitt
Editor, SC Market Bulletin

The newest energy boon to hit our state is solar farming—although “farming” might be a bit of a stretch.

Solar farms are springing up all over the state, and not by accident. Energy experts have long touted the sun as being the absolute best source of power, but harnessing its energy proved to be costly. Until recently, the technology simply wasn't available for low-cost solar energy facilities.

In 2014 the SC legislature passed a law to encourage SC Electric & Gas, Duke Energy and other providers of electricity to develop solar programs. With that encouragement, South Carolina's 20 electric cooperatives began planning to build solar farms. The cooperatives operate in all 46 counties of the state and collectively deliver electric power to more than 1.3 million South Carolinians, mostly in small towns and rural areas.

“We wanted to give our members an opportunity to take advantage of low-cost, low-hassle solar energy, and we wanted to provide that access across the state,” explained Breeden John, staff attorney for The Electric Cooperatives of South Carolina, Inc.

The co-ops have either completed or are currently building solar farms in their 20 service territories. So far 17 of the solar farms have been energized, and the remainder are due to be completed by mid-year 2018.

John explained that the land for the majority of the cooperatives' community solar projects is owned by the individual co-ops. Construction was contracted out to various companies, some in state and some out of state. The farms vary in size, with each participating cooperative offering up to 250 kilowatts (kW) of community solar installations for a total of up to five megawatts (MW) (AC power) of capacity statewide. Individual co-ops determine whether community solar is right for their members and, if so, when and how to build, market and offer it.

“The reason we're so supportive of community solar farms is that these projects provide a safe, affordable and convenient option for consumers who want to buy renewable, carbon-free energy without having to install solar panels on their own roofs,” John said.

He explained that the useful life of the technology is about 25 years, and the maintenance is minimal on solar farms. They require yearly preventative inverter maintenance and as-needed corrective maintenance, but that's about it, he said.

The Laurens Electric Cooperative owns one of the first of the ECSC solar farms to be completed. The co-op covers Laurens, Greenville and Spartanburg counties. Of its 57,000 members, about half live in Greenville County.

Jim Donahoo, Vice President of Marketing and Business Development for the Laurens co-op, explained that Laurens actually has two farms, with one phase in Mauldin and the other at the company's headquarters in Laurens. Together they cover about 2 acres of land, with a total 258 kilowatts of energy.

“We were the first utility in South Carolina to go live with the Community Solar Project,” Donahoo said. The project powered up Sept. 1 of last year.

“We gave our members the opportunity to go solar without putting it on their property, in a way that did not require a large upfront investment,” Donahoo continued. “We own the land, and we made the investment.” The cooperative wanted its members to benefit from new technology.

Laurens co-op members were offered the chance to subscribe to the solar project in kW units. Both phases sold out within five weeks of being offered.

Asked how people felt about solar farming, Donahoo replied, “It's been very positive. We've had not one negative comment about the program. Even the members who did not participate think it's wonderful.”

New Marketing Campaigns

For at least the past 13 years that I can attest to, the Department of Agriculture is always working on new ways to promote and market our farmers and our products. We are excited about some new collaborations to do just that.

This year Certified SC Grown and the SC Pork Board have partnered with the Darlington Raceway to promote events throughout the year. For the Bojangles Southern 500 NASCAR race on Sept. 3, we installed a 60x40-foot billboard promoting Certified SC Grown. Prominently featured on Turn 3, the sign says “Know the Food that Fuels You.” It will stay up all year, and you may have seen it while you were watching the race on TV.

In addition, the Pork Board has erected large signs inside the track walls promoting their product, which you also may have seen while watching the race. They will be providing all of the pork at the 5th Annual Speed and Feed BBQ Cook-off and Car Show on Oct. 28 at the track, and their members will be on hand to provide information on pork.

Another project we are excited about is a magazine venture. Several years ago we published a magazine called “Our Amazing Agriculture,” which we distributed to thousands of consumers across the state. This year we are collaborating with

SCBiz Magazine for their Winter agribusiness issue. Our staff is working with this highly respected, South Carolina-based magazine to write about agribusiness around the state. Our goal is to make sure their readers know how significant the industry really is.

A very significant endeavor for our department is a new campaign from Certified SC Grown called "Roots." The message will target the millennial generation and so-called "foodies," but it will no doubt appeal to the other generations as well. New media platforms—TV commercials, blogs on the website, and enhanced features in existing apps—will grab the attention of these young people.

The goal of our "Roots" campaign is to celebrate South Carolina's rich agrarian history. Focused on farmers and their lifestyles, the TV commercials were created to evoke a sense of pride for a wide range of products, including produce, beef, pork and poultry, all the while blending in a nostalgic feeling. The campaign highlights the many men and women who are proud to be SC farmers, and it is designed to create an emotional connection with the younger generation. I attended parts of three of the filming episodes and I know they will be top notch.

Besides showcasing what one might perceive as a typical farmer, "Roots" also focuses on new generations of farmers who embrace technologies like hydroponics. These innovations will help our agricultural community grow well into the future. Simply put, our "Roots" campaign is all about celebrating our farming history, buying fresh, locally grown food, and supporting local farmers. Be sure to keep your eyes and ears open for our new marketing campaigns throughout the state! When you see them, let us know what you think.

SUSTA Offers Seminar on Expanding Food Markets

The Southern United States Trade Association and the S.C. Department of Agriculture are offering a free half day seminar so producers can learn about exporting food and agriculture products.

The seminar will be held Oct. 19 at the French Quarter Inn in Charleston, beginning at 9 a.m. Producers will learn how to connect with foreign distributors and how to ship across international borders. USDA programs can help cut their international marketing budgets in half. Connecting with foreign distributors, financing and protecting transactions will be covered.

If you are already export savvy but have questions about SUSTA activities, they will be available to consult one-on-one about their global events and 50 percent cost share programs. Call or email to schedule an appointment. SUSTA staff will be available to meet one-on-one prior to the seminar. Contact Missie Lindsey at 504-569-5986, Missie@susta.org, or Laura Lester at 803-734-2211, llester@scda.sc.gov.

'Elmhurst Milked Peanuts – Chocolate' Is Here!

The Introduction of 'Elmhurst Milked Peanuts – Chocolate' Launches a New Peanut Product Category

BALTIMORE, Md.--"Elmhurst Milked Peanuts – Chocolate" debuted at the Natural Products Expo East conference last month, inaugurating an entire new product category for peanuts. A second peanut milk variety, "Milked Peanuts," is forthcoming. The new "Elmhurst Milked Peanuts – Chocolate" products will be available nationally in retail stores in January 2018.

The National Peanut Board played a key role in guiding the development of the plant-based peanut beverage and securing a company to bring peanut milk to market.

"Milked Peanuts – Chocolate" is one of Elmhurst™ Milked's five new plant-based beverage varieties. It was previewed at the natural foods trade show alongside Elmhurst™ Milked's other nut and grain beverage varieties.

Elmhurst Milked uses a patented cold-milling process called "milking," described as a unique process of using water to separate and draw out all the nutrients from the whole raw nuts, grains and legumes. Once the water is released, the nutrients re-combine naturally to form a smooth, creamy beverage without the use of chemicals or thickeners.

"Elmhurst Milked Peanuts – Chocolate" has a simple ingredient list of just filtered water, peanuts, cane sugar, cocoa (Dutch processed), natural flavors and salt.
